DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Occupying a prominent position on the west side of Broad Street, the Evans House does much to set the style of this area which still retains the flavor of one of Salem's most fashionable nineteenth century streets.

The Evans House is set back in a wide yard enclosed by an open-loop design cast iron fence supplied by the Camden Iron Works, Burwell and Market Streets, Salem. The fence is reinforced by molded posts with supporting buttresses and on the east side of the fence arrows fill the loops. A central gate supported by cruciform posts capped by male busts, opens onto a basket weave patterned brick walk.

The one-and-a-half- story Evans house is built of brick laid in American bond with a Flemish variant. Surrounding the base of the house is a twenty-eight inch high watertable. The L-shaped structure is covered by two concavely cut intersecting mansard roofs which are pierced by two paneled interior chimneys with corbeled caps. The roofs are covered by decoratively cut tiles laid in patterns and are accentuated by a molded metal curb with simulated dentils and ornamental corner brackets. A wide bracketed cornice interspersed with sawn decoration supports the overhanging roof. Some of the decoration is sheathed with pressed tin.

The three-bay eastern facade is symmetrically divided by a two story projecting central pavilion supported by a bracketed cornice and topped with a convexly rendered Mansard roof with metal cap and finial. The central entrance tower is composed of a one-bay entrance porch with a The support is supplied by chamfered and grooved modillioned cornice. posts resting on pedestals and surmounted by sawn consoles. The second story of the tower is lighted by a pair of round arched lunettes which have a vigorously molded Hooded oculi light the four sides of hood broken by a molded pediment. the tower roof. The entrance tower is flanked on the first floor by oneover-one segmental-shaped windows surrounded by a molded architrave and flanked by segmental-arched double-panel louvered shutters. The windows rest on decorative metal lug sills and are surmounted by gauged brick segmental arched lintels. The one-over-one-sash round arched dormers which pierce the roof have a flat end pediment cut with decorative scroll work.

The south side of the building is characterized by a two story Graham gable, the cross section of a gable top convex Mansard. On the first floor a three-sided bay window is topped by a bracketed entablature and lighted by windows similar to those of the front. Rectangular metal panels decorate the space beneath the lug sills and a segmental shaped molding runs along the lintels and through the elongated brackets which emphasize the corners. Paired round arched windows with one-over-one sash illuminate the second story. The roof is outlined by curved bargeboards which end in a sawn scroll work ornament behind which lies a louvered lunette.

The three-bay north side is a modified version of the south.

Here a north west wing has been added to the Graham gable. The windows on this side are similar to those on the eastern facade. A one-and-a-half story gabled roof one-bay addition is attached to the rear of the mansard "L". A gable shaped dormer pierces the roofline, a simple six-over-six sash window lights the first floor, and an inside end chimney with a corbeled brick cap rises from the rear wall of the one-bay ell of the old kitchen. The rear wall of the kitchen has a small window under its southern eave onto which a one story two-bay enclosed frame porch has been incorporated. Back doors from the pantry and old entranceway lead onto the porch. From this western side of the main mass, the cross gable Mansard with bargeboards and gable ornament is blind except for a slender segmental arched window on the south side.

The interior of the Evans House is marked by a central hall plan entered through the central entrance tower. The hall divides the library on the south from the parlor on the north and a flight of straight stairs on the north side of the hall ascend to the second story. Although the two front rooms are similar in dimensions their entrance doors from the front hall are asymmetrically placed along the walls.

The inside of the front doors has bevelled panels separated vertically by a rondelle and bar motif. As on the front, a slender trumeau The intricately patterned brass hardware is of separates the double doors. particular interest. Throughout the house motifs of butterflies, vines and birds are combined with geometric chevrons to ornament the doorknobs, key holes, butthinges, door plates, and the front door bellpull. Another highly ornamented feature is the closed stringer oak tread stairway decorated with diagonally slanted black walnut panels upon which rest the turned black walnut These balusters descend on a slant to the six foot black walnut newel post consisting of an octagonal base topped with a thirty inch decorative The bannister end post on the second story echoes the newel post. A closet added in 1948 now encloses the area under the stairway.

The library in the southeast corner of the house is lit by the three foot deep bay window with a segmental arched molded opening supported by colonettes on consoles. The three windows of the bay rise above paneled The distinctive fireplace on the west wall is fashioned from verigated brown marble and has a round arch opening topped by a raised cartouche and flanked by incised spandrels. The cast iron horseshoe-shaped fireback and grate, like most of the fire equipment, was manufactured by Conover, Wooly and Co. at 368 Canal Street in New York. The doors and windows of the parlor in the northeast corner of the house are ornately decorated with a robustly executed entablature supported by paneled pilasters. In the case of the doors this scheme surmounts a frosted transom with floral etching. place on the west wall is surmounted by a mirror and both panels are enframed in a hand-carved Neo-Renaissance motif rosewood border. The original French doorway leading into the dining room was replaced in the 1948 renovation by an archway. A second arch flanking the fireplace on the east wall of the dining room, is filled with a cupboard and is rendered in the Queen Anne manner. Chamfered pilasters with decorative diamond blocks bound the frieze with incised blocks encompassing stylized flowers. The decoratively chamfered

The old kitchen in the northwest ell to the rear, was converted into a breakfast room in 1948, paneled in pine and converted to modern use. The old pantry to the south of the breakfast room originally contained stairs to the maid's room above on the second floor.

The doorways on the second floor have four delicately molded panels topped with a frosted transom with a floral design. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The construction of the Evans House in 1882 coincided with the beginning of large-scale growth around Salem. In that year the decision was made to form a connection between the Norfolk and Western and the Shenandoah Valley railroads in the vicinity of nearby Big Lick, soon to become the city of Roanoke. Although Salem successfully dodged being engulfed by the rapid development of Roanoke brought about by this rail junction, the town's growth was encouraged by the area's general prosperity. A land development company was soon formed in Salem and new construction appeared throughout the town. The Evans House thus stands as an architectural manifestation of the prosperity of the 1880's and 90's experienced in Salem, as well as in numerous other towns up and down the Valley of Virginia.

Not only is the Evans House an expression of western Virginia's boom development, it ranks among the State's richest examples of the French Empire Style. The architectural value of the house to the Commonwealth is increased by the rarity of the style in Virginia. The Second Empire Style flourished in the North in the years following the War Between the States, but it appeared infrequently in Virginia and the South because of the impoverishment resulting from the War. Ironically too, the Evans House is a comparatively late example of the Second Empire style. tectural mode waned in national popularity in the 1870's and the choice of the style for the Evans House is attributed by family tradition to John M. Evan's French wife. While the house employs such basic motifs of the style as a Mansard roof, ornamented dormers and a bracketed cornice, it exhibits a particular individuality in skillfully disguising its relatively small size with a bold outline and fine proportions. Although the architect, if any, is unknown, the house gives a brilliantly executed impresssion of mass and grandeur; the Evans House is the product of highly talented craftsmen.

The Evans House stands on land which was until 1871 the tanyard property of Henry and later Charles L. Snyder. After the sale and division of the property in 1871, John Evans bought Lot No. 4 on Broad Street where the house now stands for four hundred and fifty dollars. Built eleven years after he purchased the lot, the house was valued in 1883 at $4,300. In contrast to its sixty-eight years as a tanyard, this area along Broad Street following its residential development was singled out by William McCauley in his History of Roanoke County, for "its tasteful residences with their ample and attractive yards (that) made it one of the handsomest thoroughfares in town." In 1891 the John M. Evans House, as one of the most fashionable houses in the town, was chosen to appear in a publicity booklet of the Salem land development companies.

Born on April 22, 1837, John M. Evans was the son of Tifton B. Evans a prominent landowner near Hollins, Virginia. During the War between the States John Evans was a private in the "Salem Flying Artillery", Company A, Evans came to Salem following the War and in 9th Regiment Virginia Infantry. 1877 he was listed in the Virginia Business Directory and Gazetteer as a prominent farmer, owning one hundred and seventy acres, as well as a dry goods business on Main Street. Before his death in 1891, Evans had invested heavily in Salem's land boom which had started in 1889. When he died at the age of fifty-four John M. Evans was survived by his wife but no other heirs. 1898 Jacob S. Baer purchased the land at a public auction from the Evans' The house changed hands again in 1903 when it was bought by Captain Adam Given and in 1907 Samuel Morris Martin procurred the house from Captain In 1947 the present owner C. E. Webber bought the house and through his renovations the house has been maintained as one of Salem's major architectural landmarks.
